Created 4 days ago - Last updated 1 day ago - 727 reads

A new overexposure law introduced by the government sets a 50,000 KRW fine to those who are deemed "overexposed" in public. In a K-pop culture that worships sexy singers dancing suggestively in micro-mini skirts and shorts, this new law seems to be an intrusion to the mainstream

"bottomless" fashion. While police new law is for nudity and not to hemlines, opposition are saying control on the people's freedom of expression. What will happen to Pop stars who never seem to cover legs? 'Follow this story' to find out

it's an advert. Nothing in an advert is 100% true/same. It's like you're expecting you mcdonald's burger to be the same as what they showed you on TV.
